TERMS OF REFERENCE.

1. We were appointed a Committee in January of this year to consider and report on questions relating to the Income Tax laws in the Colonies and Protectorates and, if possible, to prepare a model Income Tax Ordinance for the general use of Colonial Governments; or, at any rate, to recommend a definite and considered policy with regard to such legislation. Questions relating to the effect of United Kingdom or Dominion Income Tax on residents in the Colonies fell to be considered only in so far as these taxes involved the imposition of Double Income Tax on persons liable to pay Colonial Income Tax, and then solely with a view to the recommendation of such improvements in Colonial legislation as might appear to be required.

MEETINGS.

2. We have held in all eighteen meetings. We had hoped to finish our work in time to allow of our recommendations, if approved by the Secretary of State, being communicated to Colonial Governments early in the autumn of this year. Unfortunately, pressure of business in the Inland Revenue Department compelled us to suspend our meetings during the period devoted to the preparation of the annual financial legislation in this country and to its consideration in Parliament, and we have thus been unable to submit this report as early as we had hoped. We trust that the full consideration we have now been able to give to the problems before us will have resulted in some compensating improvement to set against any disadvantage that may accrue from the delay.

3. Correspondence received in the Colonial Office.—By the directions of the Secretary of State, letters and memoranda received in the Colonial Office from time to time from persons and associations in the Colonies and in this country containing representations or suggestions with regard to existing Colonial Income Tax legislation have been referred to us and have been carefully considered. We have also had before us various questions raised by Colonial Governments in regard to existing or contemplated legislation, and we have conferred with the Departments of the Colonial Office concerned.

4. Representatives of Colonial Associations interviewed.—At the first meeting it was agreed that it would be well to invite representatives of the various Colonial Associations in this country to attend and give evidence on the difficulties arising out of Income Tax legislation in the Colonies, to which they had drawn attention. Some of our early meetings, therefore, were devoted to informal discussions with representatives of various bodies, including the West India Committee and the Association of British Malaya.

5. Points of view of resident and non-resident taxpayers.—We have welcomed these opportunities of acquainting ourselves with the point of view of different classes of taxpayers, both resident and non-resident. It is important to make the administration of taxing Acts as little onerous as possible to the taxpayer, especially in the case of a comparatively new tax, such as the Income Tax is in the Colonies.

We have throughout tried to keep this object in view in framing our recommendations so far as is consistent with the efficient working of the Acts. This qualification is necessary. It must not be forgotten that an Income Tax can only be fair in its incidence as between different classes and individuals so long as the law is so drawn, and the machinery for its enforcement is so efficient, as not to allow any substantial amount of income to escape the tax. The taxpayer has really as much interest as the Government in preventing evasion.

THE MODEL ORDINANCE.

6. Our recommendations are reflected in the Model Ordinance annexed to this Report as Appendix I. In the following paragraphs we give our reasons for adopting the principles upon which the more important provisions of the Ordinance are based.

7. The Model Ordinance was, in the first place, drafted after a very careful study and comparison of all the existing Colonial Income Tax Acts and Ordinances, and during its subsequent consideration every effort has been made to give due weight to the conditions prevailing in the Colonies. While realising the great diversity of Colonial conditions and requirements, we are of opinion that uniformity of legislation should be aimed at as far as possible. We think that the easiest and most expeditious means of securing that degree of uniformity which is generally admitted to be desirable will be for the officers responsible for the preparation of Colonial Income Tax legislation to take a single model as the basis on which to work. We recommend, therefore, that the Model Ordinance be sent to all Colonies and Protectorates where Income Tax laws are already in force, and that the Colonial Governments be advised to repeal the existing laws and introduce fresh legislation on the lines of the Model Ordinance. We suggest also that the Model Ordinance be used as a guide by all Colonies which may in the future find it necessary to introduce an Income Tax.

8. With regard to this suggested use of the Model Ordinance, it may not be out of place to observe that the wording of the principal clauses has been selected with the greatest possible care to make corresponding provisions fit into each other and the general scheme of the Ordinance, and that if any of these clauses should be altered it is essential that full consideration should be given to the resulting changes which will be required in corresponding provisions elsewhere in the Ordinance.

SCOPE OF INCOME TAX.

9. The first and fundamental question which we had to decide was that of the scope of the Income Tax charge. After careful consideration we have come to the conclusion that the most appropriate scheme for the Colonies generally is one which imposes tax upon income which either has its origin in the Colony, or, while having its origin outside the Colony, is received in the Colony. The adoption of this straightforward rule does not result in anything more than the taxation of income that comes within the Colonial jurisdiction ;

moreover, it not only avoids the various difficulties inherent in an Income Tax code under which the amount to be charged depends in part upon whether the person is resident or non-resident, but also reduces the problems arising out of double taxation of income to comparatively small dimensions.

10. Admittedly, there are attractions in seeking to impose the tax on the incomes of residents in the Colony wheresoever arising, and whether remitted to the Colony or not, and we are aware that tax has been so imposed in more than one instance. We feel, however, that the complications and difficulties which necessarily accompany this method of taxation are so great that, in the special circumstances of comparatively small communities, it is in the best interests of a Colony to limit the scope of the Income Tax charge to income which arises in the Colony or is brought into the Colony.

BASIS OF ASSESSMENT.

11. When we had reached these conclusions as to the scope of the charge, our next task was to deal with the basis upon which the income should be assessed. In this connection, the most important item of income to be considered is undoubtedly profits from business. Such profits are assessed in the United Kingdom on the basis of the average profits of the three preceding years, while the majority of the Colonies concerned take the preceding year as the basis.

12. It was represented to us that traders resident in the United Kingdom doing business in the Colonies would find it convenient to have the same basis of assessment for each of the Income Taxes to which they were liable. On the other hand, we were informed that business firms in the West Indies were mostly in favour of the preceding year's profits as the basis, and that the substitution of the three years' average would meet with much opposition. Inasmuch as the Colonies, generally speaking, take the preceding year as the basis, it seemed to us undesirable to make a change if it could possibly be avoided. We may point out that the Royal Commission on the Income Tax* recommended the adoption of the preceding year's profits as the basis of assessment in the United Kingdom.

13. On the whole, we are of opinion that the profits of the preceding year affords the best basis of assessment for the Colonies. This basis has the great advantage that tax is payable on a profit in the year following that in which the profit is made, and not, in part, two or even three years later as under the three years' average system.

14. It is clearly desirable that the basis for the computation of all classes of income for the purposes of the tax should be the same. We therefore propose that the tax should be levied on what we have termed in the Ordinance the "chargeable income" of any person for the year preceding the year of assessment. We define the expression "chargeable income" to mean the aggregate income of any person after deducting the expenditure incurred in acquiring the income and the various other deductions for which provision is made. We have thought it desirable to avoid referring to "assessable income" and "taxable income," as these expressions have meanings as defined by the United Kingdom Income Tax Acts somewhat different from the meaning of "chargeable income" as defined in our Ordinance.

* The Royal Commission referred to here and subsequently in this Report is the Royal Commission on the Income Tax, whose Report (Cmd. 615) was dated 11th March, 1920.

ASCERTAINMENT OF "CHARGEABLE INCOME."

15. Without going into detail, we consider that all outgoings and expenses wholly and exclusively incurred in the production of income should be allowed as deductions in computing the amount of a person's "chargeable income." On the other hand, no deduction should be admitted for expenditure of a domestic or private character or for capital expenditure. In our Model Ordinance we indicate the type of expenditure which should be admissible, and that which should not be admissible, as a deduction in computing the "chargeable income."

16. Interest on borrowed money.—We propose that interest paid by a taxpayer on borrowed money which is used in acquiring his income should be deducted in ascertaining "chargeable income," but that a person who pays interest to a non-resident mortgagee or debenture holder should deduct tax from such interest and pay it over to the Colonial Government.

17. Deductions for bad and doubtful debts.—It will be seen that we have dealt specifically with the subject of bad and doubtful debts incurred in business, and that the legislation which we recommend is designed to make the laws of the Colonies in this matter correspond with commercial practice and the procedure followed by the taxing authorities in the United Kingdom, and at the same time to escape from the unsatisfactory position disclosed by the judgment given by the Privy Council in 1921 in the Jamaican case of the "Gleaner" Company, Limited, versus the Assessment Committee.*

18. Deductions for exhaustion, wear and tear of property, etc.—In the matter of allowances for depreciation of property used for business or professional purposes, we propose the adoption of the United Kingdom practice in relation to plant and machinery. In this country, in ascertaining for taxing purposes the profits of any trade, such deductions may be allowed as the Income Tax Commissioners consider just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of trade and belonging to the person by whom it is carried on.

19. Deduction for cost of replacing obsolete machinery, etc.—We also make provision in the Model Ordinance for an allowance in respect of the cost of replacing obsolete or worn-out plant and machinery similar to that in force in the United Kingdom.

20. Standard rates of depreciation.—We think that it may be of advantage to Colonial Governments if they are furnished with the rates of depreciation allowed for Income Tax purposes in the United Kingdom, where standard rates have been agreed with taxpayers in particular trades. We recommend, therefore, that the Board of Inland Revenue should be approached with a view to their supplying for the use of the Colonial taxing authorities a schedule of the rates which have been agreed upon in the case of important trades in this country. These rates, in so far as they are applicable to plant in use in this country, will normally have to be increased for plant used overseas.

21. Deduction in respect of trade losses.—Where the basis of assessment is that of the profits of the preceding year, the question at once arises as to some provision for setting off losses against future profits; and dissatisfaction has been caused in certain Colonies where no arrangement of this kind has been made. The equitable case for such a provision is obvious, and was recognised by the Royal Commission, who stated in their Report (para. 482):—

“We think, therefore, that the taxpayer might legitimately feel some grievance if under the new system he were not enabled to carry forward his loss against future profits, and we accordingly suggest that the existing provision by which repayment of tax is granted in cases of loss by reference to the aggregate income of the year, should continue in force, and that any balance of loss not so dealt with should be permitted to be carried forward (on the analogy of the Statute of Limitations) for a period of six years.”

22. The adoption of this proposal, however, might create serious difficulty in the case of a Colony which depends for the bulk of its Income Tax upon the profits of some particular industry. If the concession of carrying forward losses were unrestricted, the Colonial Government might be deprived of the greater part of its revenue from Income Tax for a lengthy period. This contingency would be very serious for the Colony, and we feel that it will be necessary to fix a limit to the loss which can thus be set against what would otherwise be the “chargeable income” in any one year. We therefore recommend that to the extent that a loss incurred in any year cannot be wholly set off against the taxpayer’s other income for that year, the loss shall be carried forward to be set off against his “chargeable income” for the next year, and if necessary, the same process shall be repeated in each of the four succeeding years, subject to the condition that in no one of those years shall the deduction on account of this loss be allowed to an amount which would reduce the amount of tax payable for any year to less than half the amount of tax which would have been payable if no deduction had been made for such loss. While under this system a taxpayer may in exceptional circumstances incur a loss, the whole of which may not be set off against profits, it will be appreciated that the same result not infrequently happens under the system of assessment on the three years’ average.

(See illustrations in Appendix II.)

23. Certain deductions in the case of residents in the Colony and British subjects. In the case of individuals who are resident in the Colony, or who are British subjects resident elsewhere, we have provided for the deduction of a fixed sum to be free of tax, and also for deductions in respect of (a) earned income, (b) wife, (c) children, and (d) life insurance premiums, etc.

24. We consider that the allowance of a fixed sum to be free of tax is essential, but that it is primarily a question for each Colony to decide for itself whether it is desirable to include in its Income Tax legislation all or any of the other deductions. These other deductions are perhaps not essential, having regard to the graduation of the rate of tax and to the fact that the rates generally in force in the Colonies will, it is anticipated, be substantially lower than those in force in the United Kingdom. If, however, the deductions are thought necessary, we recommend that they should be granted in the manner indicated in the Model Ordinance. For example, we think that where the principle of differentiation between earned and unearned income is adopted, the procedure described in para. 111 of the Report of the Royal Commission and now in force in the United Kingdom should be followed in the Colonies, i.e., for the purpose of computing the chargeable income, the figure to be included for any earned income should be the amount of that income diminished by a certain fraction thereof. The fraction so adopted in the United Kingdom is one-tenth, subject to a maximum deduction of £200 in the case of any individual, but we recognise that this fraction may not be considered suitable for the Colonies, where conditions differ from those in the United Kingdom.

EXEMPTIONS.

25. We have inserted in the Ordinance a section (No. 8) to make provision for certain exemptions from Income Tax. The items specified in this section are intended merely as a list for the consideration of the local Governments, and are liable to variation in accordance with local conditions.

We understand, however, that the Secretary of State has already communicated to certain Colonial Governments his views as to some of the items, such as the official emoluments of the Governor or of the officer administering the Government in his stead, and the emoluments of members of the permanent Consular Services of foreign countries. The last-mentioned item represents the old-established practice in the United Kingdom of exempting the emoluments of foreign Consuls and those of the permanent members of their staffs. Such members of the staffs, however, as are appointed locally and paid by the Consul will not be entitled to exemption.

26. It may be pointed out that it is not intended that where the income of the Government Savings Bank is exempted, depositors' interest should be exempt from tax; this interest will, of course, be included in the return of income to be rendered by the depositor and will, as such, be subject to tax.

27. Question of exemption of interest on Colonial Government Loans.—A provision is included in the model Ordinance under which the Governor may by proclamation exempt interest payable on any Government loan, either generally or only in respect of such interest as is payable to persons not residing in the Colony. Such a provision has been shown by experience to be useful in facilitating the flotation of Colonial loans. The policy of such an exemption is outside the scope of our investigations, save in so far as it affects the incidence of the tax. Looking at the matter solely from this point of view, we cannot but regard the policy as unsound. It seems to us that if the object in view is the attraction of outside capital to the Colony, it could be achieved if the exemption from tax were confined to interest payable to persons not residing in the Colony. For this reason we have drafted the provision in our Ordinance in such a form that the Government can issue a loan with the privilege of exemption accorded only to non-residents.

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

28. In view of the difficulty of applying the ordinary method of computing profits to the case of insurance companies, it is desirable to make special provision for the basis upon which their profits should be charged to tax. After considering the legislation in force for this purpose in the United Kingdom, in the Dominions, and in various Colonies, we have come to the conclusion that the law at present in force in Jamaica provides in its general principles a system which is suitable for the Colonies. We have, therefore, embodied the provisions of the Jamaican Law in the Model Ordinance, with such amendments as appear necessary in order to secure conformity with the principles upon which the Model Ordinance proceeds.

DEDUCTION OF TAX FROM DIVIDENDS OF COMPANIES.

29. We recommend that companies registered in a Colony should be entitled to deduct from the dividends paid to their shareholders tax at the rate paid or payable by the company on the income out of which the dividends are paid, and that such companies should, upon payment of a dividend, whether tax is deducted from such dividend or the dividend is paid free of tax, furnish to each shareholder a certificate setting out the amount of the dividend to which such shareholder is entitled and the amount of tax which the company has deducted, or which is applicable thereto, as the case may be. It is not necessary here to defend the principle of taxation of dividends by deduction at the source, which has long been recognised in the United Kingdom as a very convenient and effective method of collecting tax.

It is to be observed that though the gross amount of a shareholder's dividend falls to be included by him in his statement of income for the purpose of the Model Ordinance the tax suffered by the shareholder indirectly, i.e. through the company, must be taken into account in arriving at the total amount of tax payable by him upon his income, and repayment of tax made where necessary. (See illustration in Appendix III.)

30. We have confined the system of taxation of dividends at the source to the dividends declared by companies registered in the Colony, because such companies are subject to the jurisdiction of the Colonial legislature and can be empowered by local legislation to make the deduction. In this connection, our attention has been drawn to a provision in certain Colonial Ordinances which has purported to make all Companies, whether incorporated locally or not, liable, as agents for their shareholders resident outside the Colony, for payment of the tax upon dividends payable to them, while neither laying down a method, nor devising machinery by which the Company may recover from the shareholder any tax so paid. We are agreed that such a provision as this cannot be justified.

WIFE'S INCOME.

31. It will be seen that we have followed the practice in the United Kingdom and in the Dominions and Colonies generally of aggregating the income of husband and wife for Income Tax purposes, but that special provision is made to enable the appropriate part of the tax charged to be recovered, when necessary, from the wife without the formality of an actual assessment upon her.

GRADUATION OF THE TAX: INDIVIDUALS AND COMPANIES.

32. In the United Kingdom the Income Tax payable by individuals is graduated, but that payable by other persons, i.e., companies, etc., is charged at a flat rate without any statutory allowances. As regards the tax deducted by a company from dividends paid to individuals, the appropriate adjustment is made either by repayment of the excess, if the amount deducted exceeds the amount for which the shareholder is personally liable, or, in other cases, by the imposition of an additional Income Tax called Super-tax.

33. In several of the Colonies, on the other hand, the rate of Income Tax has been graduated in the case of companies as well as in the case of individuals.

34. While it is in theory possible to justify an attempt to fit the burden of an Income Tax to the circumstances of the individual by graduating the rate of tax, we can find no sufficient reason for graduating the rate of tax payable by companies according to the amount of the profits they make.

35. In our opinion companies should pay the same amount of tax per £ of assessable profit whatever the amount of that profit may be. The tax deducted from dividends paid to shareholders should in due course be credited against the tax properly due on their respective incomes as indicated in paragraph 29 of this Report. We therefore recommend that Colonial Governments be advised to adopt, in the case of companies, a flat rate of tax.

36. In determining the flat rate to be charged in the case of companies, the Colonial authorities will no doubt have in mind several considerations, such as the amount of revenue required from Income Tax, the average rate of duty hitherto paid by companies, and the labour involved in making repayments to individuals if the rate be fixed too high. We have, therefore, not attempted to suggest where, in any given scheme of graduation, the flat rate should be fixed.

TAXATION OF PERSONS RESIDENT OUTSIDE THE COLONY.

37. Section 26 of the Model Ordinance follows the provisions of Rules 5 to 12 of the General Rules applicable to Schedules A, B, C, D, and E in the First Schedule to the United Kingdom Income Tax Act, 1918. These Rules were evolved after very careful thought and consideration, and with due appreciation of the difficulties inherent in any scheme for the taxation of persons not resident in the country where the tax is levied. By adopting the United Kingdom scheme, we feel that the Colonies will not only have the benefit of machinery which has been carefully devised for its purpose, and is actually in use, but will thereby avoid many of the difficulties that have arisen from methods which certain Colonial Governments, whose legislation is in this respect not based on the United Kingdom procedure, have employed in order to tax the profits of non-resident persons trading through agents in a Colony.

38. For example, our attention has been particularly drawn to Section 24 of the Trinidad Ordinance No. 8, 1922, which is, in our opinion, open to serious criticism. This Section provides that where the profits of a non-resident trader selling goods through an agent in Trinidad cannot be ascertained to the satisfaction of the Trinidad Commissioner, the non-resident's profits are to be assumed to be an amount not exceeding 10 per cent. of the selling price. The Section then proceeds to define what is to be deemed to constitute trading within Trinidad, in the following terms:—"A non-resident person shall be deemed to be trading within the Colony in every case where his recognised agent or other representative resident in the Colony sells in the Colony the goods of such non-resident person, whether the contract for the sale of the goods, the delivery thereof, or the payment therefor, is made within or out of the Colony."

39. We consider that there is no necessity either to fix or to limit the percentage of turn-over or receipts to be adopted as the basis of the assessment of the tax, whether in the case of non-resident traders generally, or, as has been provided in some Colonies, in the special case of non-resident shipping companies. We prefer the United Kingdom method of leaving the taxing authority, in any case where the actual profits which the non-resident derives from his trade within the country cannot be ascertained, to fix such a fair and reasonable percentage as the facts of the particular case may justify.

40. With regard to the attempted definition in the Trinidad Ordinance of cases in which there "shall be deemed to be trading within the Colony," we think it may be worth while to quote the opinion of the Royal Commission on this matter, as recorded in para. 47 of their Report:—"We shall not attempt to define in any set form of words what constitutes trading within the United Kingdom as distinct from trading with the United Kingdom. It would be difficult to evolve any reasonably short definition which could be used as a touchstone to determine in every particular instance whether a series of transactions falls within the one category or the other." In our opinion Section 24 of the Trinidad Ordinance has not overcome the difficulty to which the Royal Commission referred and must fail to achieve its object.

41. It is clear that no series of rules can be evolved which would cover every case that may arise. By way of illustration, we may cite what may be regarded as two extreme examples :—

(a) In the first case, a non-resident trader authorises a resident in the Colony to carry on a regular agency there, to make contracts on his behalf, and to deliver and receive payment for his goods. In such circumstances there can be no doubt that trading is carried on in the Colony by the non-resident trader through his agent.

(b) In the second case, a non-resident trader sends price-lists of his goods to some person resident in the Colony, who distributes those lists there and canvasses for orders on behalf of the non-resident. But this person is a mere canvasser and does nothing more for the non-resident trader. The purchaser in the Colony makes his contract outside the Colony, and delivery and payment are also made outside the Colony. Here it would be obviously improper to hold that trading is carried on in the Colony by the non-resident trader through the canvasser, although, of course, the latter would be liable for tax in respect of his remuneration.

Between these two extremes lies an indefinite variety of gradations in the manner in which such business may be conducted, and each case must be determined on the particular facts.

42. In concluding this Section of our Report, we wish to make it clear that in our opinion, where a non-resident has an agent in the Colony who carries on business for him there, the profit arising from such business should be taxed, as is the case in this country, but, while tax should be charged on profit gained by trading in the Colony, it should be not charged on profit arising from trading with the Colony.

DOUBLE INCOME TAX WITHIN THE EMPIRE.

43. The question of relief from double taxation of income within the Empire was exhaustively considered by a Sub-Committee appointed by the Royal Commission to confer with representatives of the Dominions on the subject. The recommendations of this Sub-Committee were accepted without reservation by the Royal Commission (paragraph 70 of their Report), and were as follows :—

“Firstly, that in respect of income taxed both in the United Kingdom and in a Dominion, in substitution for the existing partial reliefs there should be deducted from the appropriate rate of the United Kingdom Income Tax (including Super-tax), the whole of the rate of the Dominion Income Tax charged in respect of the same income, subject to the limitation that in no case should the maximum rate of relief given by the United Kingdom exceed one-half of the rate of the United Kingdom Income Tax (including Super-tax) to which the individual taxpayer might be liable ; and

“Secondly, that any further relief necessary in order to confer on the taxpayer relief amounting in all to the lower of the two taxes (United Kingdom and Dominion), should be given by the Dominion concerned.”

44. This scheme was put into force, so far as this country is concerned, by the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1920, and the complementary action to be taken by Colonies under the scheme was the subject of a “Miscellaneous” despatch of the 19th November, 1920, from the Secretary of State to all Colonies where Income Tax legislation was then in force.

45. Proposal for apportionment of tax between Exchequers.—In this matter of double taxation, witnesses who came before us urged that every person in the Empire should be assessed where he is resident or has his principal place of business, and nowhere else. The whole tax could, it was suggested, be paid in the place of residence or control, and subsequently divided between the respective Governments on some agreed basis.

46. This proposal was advocated as being the simplest method of avoiding double taxation, and at the same time of obviating the difficulties which arise from the existence of different bases of assessment to Income Tax in various parts of the Empire and from the varying decisions of local authorities.

47. The proposal is by no means new. It is one which was dealt with by the Sub-Committee of the Royal Commission. This Sub-Committee, the meetings of which were attended by representatives of the Dominions, emphatically rejected it, on the ground that “there are serious objections, not the least being that it obscures the independent right of taxation inherent in every State, and may create the false impression that a State is exempting a class of income which it is in fact charging ; or that it is contributing towards the revenue of another State” (para. 19 of the Sub-Committee’s report, printed as Appendix I to the Report of the Royal Commission).

48. The objections to adopting any proposal of this character seem to us conclusive

49. Double Income Tax : “relief before payment.”—A difficulty which in certain quarters had been thought to impair the working of the scheme of relief recommended by the Royal Commission was clearly due to a misunderstanding of the procedure followed by the Inland Revenue authorities in this country. For example, the representatives of the West India Committee and the Association of British Malaya complained that under the present system the taxpayer was compelled to pay his full amount of tax both in the United Kingdom and in the Colony, and subsequently to make a claim for repayment in either or both countries. They represented that, as a result of this, delays occurred, and considerable sums of money were “locked up” with injurious effect upon the taxpayer’s business. As a matter of fact, however, the law in the United Kingdom (Finance Act, 1920, Section 27 (1)) grants relief to “any person who has paid, by deduction or otherwise, or is liable to pay, United Kingdom income tax." In accordance with the recommendation of the Royal Commission, the section contemplates that the relief shall be given, whenever possible, by way of adjustment before payment of the United Kingdom tax.

50. At the present time the Colonial Ordinances generally contain a corresponding provision for the purpose of giving the reciprocal relief contemplated by the scheme. This provision was drafted in the Colonial Office, but further consideration has shown that if relief is to be given before payment of the tax—which in our opinion should be the case—it is necessary that the Colonial provision should go a little farther than does Section 27 of the United Kingdom Finance Act, 1920. Accordingly, in dealing with this matter in our Model Ordinance we have made the slight alteration necessary to ensure that relief may be granted upon proof of liability to pay tax in the Colony and in the United Kingdom and before actual payment.

51. Minor difficulties.—Some of the difficulties which business firms are now experiencing in relation to their claims to relief from double taxation may doubtless be attributed to the novelty of Income Tax legislation in the Colonies. These difficulties will, it is hoped, disappear in time. Similar difficulties have had to be overcome in the working of claims to relief from double taxation where the United Kingdom and the Dominions are concerned. Relief in respect of Double Income Tax was first granted by the United Kingdom Exchequer in 1916, and thus for the past six years the problem has been faced in relation to the Dominions. The Inland Revenue Department have found that the scheme adopted has, on the whole, worked very smoothly, and has certainly not given rise to any insuperable difficulties. Isolated cases must inevitably occur from time to time requiring special consideration, but they have been few in number and there is certainly no general dissatisfaction in this country on the subject.

52. It has been pointed out that the drawing up of profit and loss accounts to show what profits arise in a Colony involves increased clerical and accountancy charges; this work is, we fear, sometimes inevitable in the case of persons liable to pay Income Tax levied by more than one country.

53. Assessment of non-resident traders.—It is clearly desirable that non-residents who derive income from a Colony should contribute their fair share to the expenses of the administration which renders it possible to earn that income. We are satisfied, however, that the non-resident trader, e.g., the company managed and controlled in this country and trading in various Colonies, does find serious difficulties in dealing with the question of determining the several liabilities to tax abroad, and that while these difficulties will certainly be diminished by a more uniform system of Income Tax legislation in the Colonies, they will still remain of a formidable nature. It has been urged that among the difficulties inherent in the present system are :—

- (1) The trader's representatives on the spot are often not competent to deal with matters of taxation; and, if they were competent, it would usually be impossible to furnish them

- in good time with the whole of the information which the Colonial authorities might require ;
- (2) The trader's representatives are often merely agents, and he is unwilling to give such agents confidential information regarding his profits ;
 - (3) If the trader attempts to deal with the matter by correspondence, it is difficult for him adequately to present his case—the more troublesome matters requiring personal explanation and discussion ;
 - (4) Complete accounts are seldom kept in the Colony, and the books cannot be produced to the Colonial authorities.

Whether justified or not, any suspicion that, owing to lack of facilities to present his case, the non-resident is called upon to bear an unfair share of the burden of the tax is bound to cause a Colony material injury by driving away capital and trade.

54. On the other hand, Colonial Governments must have serious difficulties in dealing with the Income Tax due from non-resident taxpayers. Accounts may be furnished by post, but there is little or no opportunity of submitting them to such tests and checks as are possible in the case of residents. Correspondence involves delay, and is, as a rule, an unsatisfactory substitute for personal discussion. We see reason to fear that the Colonial Governments may in some cases lose an appreciable portion of the tax which is really due to them. We think, therefore, it is very desirable that they should have more facilities than they have at present for investigating the accounts of non-resident traders before proceeding to assessment.

55. We are convinced that it is desirable, both in the interests of the Colonial Governments and of the non-resident traders, that an attempt should be made as far as possible to overcome these difficulties. Having regard to the close financial relations between this country and the Colonies, and to the very large amount of capital invested in the Colonies by persons in the United Kingdom, the difficulties which we have indicated are to a very considerable extent confined to the case of residents in this country. We think that the solution of this problem lies in the proposal which we are about to make.

56. Proposed appointment of agent in the United Kingdom.—We recommend the appointment of an official resident in the United Kingdom as the recognised agent of each and every Colony which imposes Income Tax. It seems to us evident that such an agent will be in a better position than the local official to investigate and check the returns of residents in this country, and to discuss with the persons concerned their various difficulties, and come to an agreement with them where agreement is possible. If no agreement can be reached, the non-resident trader will, of course, have to make his appeal in the Colony in the usual way.

57. The Colonies concerned would, in our opinion, thus secure substantial benefits both in a smoother administration of their tax and in a larger yield of revenue. Moreover, the existence of such an officer would obviously be an advantage in relation to matters of Double Income Tax.

58. We have therefore included in our Model Ordinance a provision for the appointment of this agent in the United Kingdom, but whether the appointment of such an agent with the necessary staff is advisable will depend on the amount of tax estimated to be assessable annually in respect of the profits and income of companies, firms and residents in the United Kingdom who are liable to pay tax in the Colonies. So far as our information goes, we do not think that the cost of the office of the agent in London would exceed a reasonable percentage of the tax with which the agent and his staff would be called upon to deal. The expense of the London office might, it is suggested, be equitably shared between the Colonies, normally on the basis of the assessments agreed in London for each Colony.

DOUBLE INCOME TAX: INTERCOLONIAL RELIEF.

59. The existing Colonial Ordinances provide for relief from Double Income Tax as between Colonies and the United Kingdom, but few of them contain a corresponding provision for giving relief as between themselves and other parts of the Empire. This problem was mentioned in the Report of the Sub-Committee appointed by the Royal Commission*, who, in para. 34 of their Report, stated as follows :—

“ We are, however, authorised by all the representatives, with the exception of one who preferred to wait instructions from his Government before expressing an opinion, to state that they agree that the suggested solution of the appropriation of the burden of the necessary relief is one of which they personally approve, that they are prepared to recommend it to their respective Governments, and further, that the proposed relief should also be applied by the Dominions inter se if applied as between the United Kingdom and the Dominions.”†

60. Being convinced of the necessity of securing a uniform basis of relief as between Colonies, we recommend that Colonial Governments be invited to adopt the system of intercolonial relief in the case of Double Income Tax which we have incorporated in our Model Ordinance, and which, in consonance with the proposals of the Royal Commission, is based upon the same principles as those underlying the scheme already in operation between the United Kingdom on the one hand and the Dominions and Colonies on the other.

ADMINISTRATION.

61. We have already touched upon one aspect of administration in our proposal in para. 56 for the appointment of a representative agent in London to deal with the assessment to Colonial Income Tax of residents in the United Kingdom. With regard to the general question of administration we have, as far as possible, followed the existing procedure in Dominion and Colonial legislation; thus

* Vide paragraph 43 of this Report.

† The term “ Dominions ” was expressly used throughout the Sub-Committee’s Report to include not only the self-governing Dominions, but also India and British possessions generally.

provision has been made in the Model Ordinance for the appointment of a Commissioner of Income Tax and of such collectors and other staff as may be necessary. We realise that in many of the smaller Colonies no elaborate arrangements are necessary, and that the local Commissioner will discharge most of the duties connected with the levying of the tax; but large communities will no doubt require a more highly organised administration, and in these cases it may be necessary to provide the Commissioner with a local Assessment Committee to help him in his work.

62. Powers of Commissioner: machinery for assessments and for appeals, etc.—We do not consider that any detailed comment is required on our proposals regarding the general powers of the Commissioner or the machinery for making assessments. In providing for appeals against assessments, our object has been, while limiting the right of appeal on questions of fact, to place no limit to the right of appeal upon questions of law.

63. In all these matters we have done our best to maintain the balance of equity between the taxing authorities on the one hand and the taxpaying public on the other. We have, as a rule, been guided by the principles underlying Income Tax legislation in the United Kingdom, and wherever we have departed from this standpoint we have done so in the belief that local conditions in the Colonies called for other methods.

64. We desire to record our debt to our Secretary for his constant and willing help in every branch of our task, in spite of the many other duties incumbent on him.

resident person, in the same manner as returns or particulars are to be delivered by persons acting for incapacitated or non-resident persons of income to be charged; provided that the amount of the percentage shall in each case be determined, having regard to the nature of the business and shall, when determined by the Commissioner, be subject to an appeal to a Judge as provided by section forty-four of this Ordinance.

APPENDIX II.

TABULAR CALCULATION TO ILLUSTRATE WORKING OF THE PROPOSED SYSTEM OF SETTING-OFF OF LOSSES AGAINST FUTURE PROFITS (see PARA. 22 OF THE REPORT AND SECTION 13 OF THE MODEL INCOME TAX ORDINANCE).

In each of the first three cases it is assumed that there is a flat-rate of tax of 1s. in the £, i.e., 5 per cent., and that no allowances are due under sections 14 and 18 of the Ordinance. Each example also starts from the assumption that in the year 1930 the taxpayer incurred a total business loss of £10,000, but received £5,000 from other sources of income. The net loss, therefore, which could not be set off against other income in 1930 is £5,000.

But as the provisions of the Act do not provide for any allowance after the year of assessment 1936, for a loss incurred in 1930, allowance could never be made for the remaining £100 of the loss.

CASE V.—In Case IV. above—if the income arising in 1935 and assessed in 1936 had been £400 only, the tax thereon would have been £7 10s. Half of this tax is £3 15s., and this represents tax on first £300 of income. It would have been possible, therefore, to have set off only £100 of the £148 balance of loss outstanding. Allowance could never have been made for the remaining £48.

APPENDIX III.

The following example is intended to explain the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 23 of the Model Ordinance relating to the deduction of tax from the dividends of companies. (Vide also para. 29 of the Report.)

A company is resident in the Colony, where its chargeable income for a year of assessment amounts to £6,000, made up as follows :—

Profits of the year preceding the year of assessment arising in the Colony	5,000
Profits received in the Colony during the year preceding the year of assessment and derived from business operations carried on by the Company outside the Colony... ..	1,000
	<hr/> £6,000 <hr/>

The Company pays tax in the Colony on this amount at the flat rate of Xs. in the £.

The Company's profits outside the Colony during the year preceding the year of assessment amounted to £5,000 and out of the total profits of £10,000 for that year (£5,000 inside the Colony plus £5,000 outside the Colony), the Company paid dividends amounting to £9,000.

Section 23 of the Ordinance provides that in a case of this nature the Company's right of deduction shall be restricted to that "portion of the dividends which is paid out of income on which tax is paid or payable by the Company." In the case taken, the Company would, under Section 23, be entitled to deduct tax from six-tenths of the total dividend of £9,000, that is, from £5,400 of the dividend.
